The trouble has been that the worker, in urgent need of a position, invariably overstates ability and experience, and the average situation wanted advertisement has become a meaningless jumble of words which does not carry any significance to a prospective employer.

The Tribunal" offers a solution for this problem. It is only after a careful investigation that any advertisement is published under this classification. Every statement in each advertisement must be in keeping with that investigation. Exaggerated or misleading statements are not permitted. Tribune readers believe in The Tribune. The indorsement of this paper inspires confidence in the honesty, truth and conservatism of advertisements published under this classification. Employers will engage needed workers, investors will respond to investment opportunities, high class workers will answer help wanted advertisements if they are indorsed by The Tribune.

This has been demonstrated by the experience of "Tribunal" advertisers and is contrary to the theory mentioned in the first paragraph.
